The Good Life

By Jeremy Sands

Starring Katherine Parkinson

Remember the Goods? Tom and Barbara, suburban eco-warriors? And their next-door neighbours Margo and Jerry Leadbetter, desperately trying to maintain the Surbiton status quo?

Well they're back – and on stage for the first time in The Good Life, a theatre reimagining of the TV sitcom that delighted countless millions in the 1970s.

Jeremy Sams' play leads the well-loved characters through various adventures, some old, some new, all hilarious and often (even today) worryingly familiar...

This new play celebrates a time when, whatever our differences, we still managed to get on with our neighbours.

The Dresser

By Ronald Harwood

Directed by Terry Johnson

Starring Julian Clary and Matthew Kelly

Inspired by memories of working as Donald Wolfit's dresser as a young man, Ronald Harwood's evocative, affectionate and hilarious portrait of backstage life is one of the most acclaimed dramas of modern theatre.

It is 1942 and in a war-torn provincial theatre an ageing actor manager, known to his loyal acting company as 'Sir', is struggling to cling on to his sanity and complete his two hundred and twenty seventh performance of King Lear.

It is down to Norman, Sir's devoted dresser, to ensure that in spite of everything, the show goes on. For sixteen years Norman has been there to fix Sir's wig, massage his ego, remind him of his opening lines and provide the sound effects in the storm scene.

Private Lives

By Noel Coward

Directed by Christopher Luscombe

Starring Nigel Havers

Coward's dazzling comic masterpiece is both a scintillatingly witty and scathingly vitriolic study of the rich and reckless in love.

Ever suave, dapper and thoroughly charming, Nigel Havers plays Elyot, the role taken by Noël Coward himself in the original production in 1930. This will be the first time he has performed The Master's work on stage.

Elyot and Amanda, who were once married to each other, find themselves on honeymoon with their new partners, in the same hotel in the South of France and admiring the vista from adjoining balconies. Their initial horror evaporates as, within no time at all, they're sharing cocktails, cigarettes and a romantic serenade and rekindling their previous passion. Caring nothing for scandal, they elope to Amanda's Paris flat where their lust thaws as quickly as it had reignited and they resume the slanging match which drove them apart in the first place.
